Flatbottom Ferry Boat Capsizes in the River at Cleveland.

The Most Appalling Disaster Since the Viaduct Horror Last Winter.

It Was Loaded With Laborers at the Time—Between Fifteen and Twenty Persons Drowned—Fourteen Dead Bodies Have Been Found so Far.

CLEVELAND, July 17.—The most appalling disaster which has occurred in Cleveland, except the Viaduct horror, last winter, when a loaded car plunged 100 feet into the river, occurred Thursday at three o'clock. While the flat-bottomed ferryboat, loaded with between forty and fifty laborers, was crossing in the old river channel, it was capsized and all the men thrown into the channel and between fifteen and twenty drowned, 14 bodies having already been taken from the water. The accident was due to a panic among the men on board. The boat was loaded so heavily that the gunwales were only three inches above the water, and a passing tug made waves which came into the boat. At once there was a rush to the other side and the boat went under and spilled the men. They were all members of a gang of ore handlers and were coming to their homes. The scene in the river, as described by the men on the tug and the steamer Langdon, which were passing, was one of a wild struggle for life. Men grappled each other and went down in fierce embrace. Lines and life preservers were thrown from both vessels and many were pulled aboard. Others of the unfortunates were rescued by small boats and some swam ashore. The life saving crew was summoned and the work of searching for bodies at once began. Within a short time 12 of the unfortunates were brought to shore and taken to the morgue for identification. Those who escaped scattered in every direction and it is uncertain just how many lives were lost; but 20 men are reported missing and the dragging of the channel is still in progress. The crowding of the boat was due to the fact that the ore gangs pay just so much a trip on the ferry and the more that got on the less the cost to the passengers. The men mostly lived on Guage street and Selden avenue, which lead down to the docks and ship yards and the scenes there are indescribable. Men, women and children were running about screaming and the disorder which prevailed made it impossible to get intelligent stories from even those who were rescued and have returned home. The men were all Germans or Poles and their families can not speak English. By 11 o'clock Thursday night 14 bodies had been recovered and taken to the various morgues. There was an immense crowd soon gathered on the bank of the river, watching the work of the boats conducting the search. Among them was Wm. Benlow, a pressman. In moving about he lost his footing, fell into the river and was drowned. The work of identification is proceeding slowly, owing to the bodies having been taken to various morgues. The scenes enacted by the undertakers were disgusting in the extreme. They almost came to blows in their anxiety to gain possession of the bodies and the police had to interfere in the interest of decency, and threaten to arrest them.

CLEVELAND, July 17.—At daybreak Friday the crew of the fire tug Cleveland returned to the old river bed to continue the search for the bodies of the men drowned by the capsizing of the ferryboat Thursday night. When Capt. Motley and the life-saving crew quit at 1 a. m., after a diligent search of five hours, in which 15 bodies were hauled to the surface, the crew of the Cleveland took the life-savers' apparatus and continued the search until 5:30 a. m. It was resumed after breakfast.

An hour after daybreak the streets and bypaths leading to the scene of the horror were packed with a steady stream of humanity. While hundreds came out of curiosity, in the great throng, however, were many anxious relatives of the missing. At nine o'clock the adjoining docks were lined with thousands of people watching the search. The decks of the steamers Bessemer and Wolf were filled to overflowing. It was estimated that nearly 10,000 people assembled to watch the search. Four boats, each containing two men, glided about, trailing a line attached to grappling hooks. When the ill-fated scow was righted, hats, caps and dinner pails floated from underneath. There were still three bodies missing at noon.

One of the most important acts of the meeting was the adoption Thursday of a resolution favoring union with the Green Glass Workers' association. Pittsburgh was chosen as the next place of meeting.
